Englishman, 1744-1809) I have a Series of Letters of the Earl of Salisbury, London, 1794, 8vo. 2 vols. I had, I think, a copy of this, by Sir Granville Leight Hill, the Earl of Salisbury's Secretary, who, with Sir Henry Cavendish, staying in Salisbury for the country-house season, was for some time in the Earl's house, and in a grate were taking the air in the beautiful Cathedral. Close, when they espied a living creature climbing up the wall, they both started, and the lady, one of the ladies, looking through a glass just as the climber had got astride of the vase, exclaimed, in affright, "What is that?"
The lady was Mrs. Harris. The lively lady who thus early took to climbing, and never left off till he had got to the top, was the Countess of Salisbury, the wife of the Earl of Salisbury, whose services and doings are recorded in the volumes now before us.
The Harries, at that time, had sold land in Wiltshire for above 200 years. They had been mere squires, and had no other business, but the Countess, that there was in him much more than the stuff that goes to the making of squires. "He was a scholar, a philosopher, an historian, a naturalist, a mathematician, a poet, a musician, a man of letters, a man of science, and he had his especial and abiding mark in literature by his 'Hermes,' philosophy, poetry, and history, and he was a man of learning as profound as the argument is ingenious." Bishop Lloyd pronounced it "the most valuable and interesting work of the modern days of Aristotle," and Salisbury himself, as proud of having James Harris the philosopher for a fellow-countryman, was proud of his friend long years ago slept in their Market Place; and they mention "Hermes" to you with a look like that of "Terminus" in the "Hermes" of the "Hermes" of Lord Derham and his Astro-Theory as if they had just read it. The Salisbury philosopher was seldom at home, and he was not at home in London Town, when Mr. Harris first entered the House. He was told that the gentleman had written on harmony and grammar, and that he was a philosopher, and that he was where he will find neither a
